California Vaccine Exemption Rights Leaders

Hold California Summits

*Parents work to keep their children healthy and expect to be protected in their duty as decision-makers regarding medical treatments for their children. When there are known risks, parents have the final word. But not in California! In 2015 California passed Senate Bill 277 taking away parent rights to decline vaccines for their children if they wanted their child to attend school or daycare, even when the medical community acknowledges that vaccines are not 100 percent safe for everyone. NHFC was honored to accept an invitation from California leaders for NHFC's Diane Miller JD, Director of Law and Public Policy, to be the moderator of the gathering and support the work of Open Space facilitator, Denise Lewis Premechak as these amazing leaders gathered.
